If you're new to Photoshop, you'll find that although it has changed a lot over the years, many basic concepts remain the same. If you're already very familiar with Photoshop, you may find that Elements offers a lot of new features. Photoshop Elements uses a similar interface to the traditional Photoshop interface. Most buttons in Elements are the same as in Photoshop, but they're often arranged differently and the wording of some buttons may differ. You can adjust the color, shape, or other properties of that layer and then move it to a different part of the image. When you're working on your document, the entire image appears as a single layer. The entire image appears on the screen as a single layer. To work on multiple layers, place the layer you want to edit on a separate layer from other layers. For example, you could place a layer containing a flower on the layer above or below the layer containing the sky. How to Find and Edit Layers in Photoshop Elements In Elements, you can see and edit the layers in your document by using these steps: 1. Open the document you want to edit. 2. Q: Validating a non-parameterized view I have two views in my controller: 1) : 2) The first view works fine, the second (which is supposed to be a copy/paste of the first) doesn't work. I don't know why, as from what I can tell the code for the second view (the one that doesn't work) is essentially a copy-paste of the first. The parameters pass correctly through, and all the validation is done correctly. Here is the code for my views: @model IList @foreach (var item in Model) { @item } @using (Html.BeginForm("Update", "Messages", FormMethod.Post, new { id = "updateForm" })) { Add a message: @Html.TextBoxFor(model => model.Message) @Html.ValidationSummary(true) } And here is the code for my controller method, with just the relevant code for the action passed in: [HttpGet] public ActionResult Update(IList messages) {
