Although Photoshop is an essential part of any graphic designer's toolbox, it's by no means the only way to produce quality art and design. Even as professional designers employ a combination of photoshop and other tools, designers generally specialize in one particular aspect of the design process. In addition to Photoshop, designers use Illustrator for artistic creation, InDesign for layout and authoring, and Dreamweaver for web design. If you're not a graphic designer, you can still use Photoshop by training yourself on how to use the program's controls. This chapter focuses on Photoshop. Getting to Know Photoshop The foremost part of the Photoshop interface is the workspace. You edit your images in the workspace window, and you view your design components in the workspace document browser. Figure 1-1 illustrates a typical workspace. The items on the left side of the workspace are the tools and features you can use to edit your image, whereas the items on the right represent the layers you create when you work with layers. Keep in mind that these menus and features on the left side of the workspace are the main tools you use to create and design in Photoshop; the tools on the right side are for manipulating the image as it's currently viewed. Figure 1-1: The work area for an image is on the left side of the screen. On the right side are the layers the image is composed of. In addition, you can use the menu bar to access additional options for Photoshop. In this chapter, you see those features only as you need them to use Photoshop to create and edit your images. Chapter 2 shows you how to customize the menu. What you see on the workspace is determined by the software's user preferences. When you're first using Photoshop, you may find that the default settings aren't quite what you expect. Although you can change these settings, Photoshop also has a Preferences dialog box from which you can make changes. The best place to make these changes is in your Preferences. Breaking down Photoshop's workspace Photoshop's workspace is the home base where you work on and manipulate your images. In a workspace window, you find the Photoshop tools that you use to design your art in the workspace. You can open several windows in the workspace simultaneously. Your image is loaded in the bottom window, and you can also open another window with a layer or layers in it that you're working on at the same time. In addition to the workspace window, you

Hejira (2013 film) Hejira () is a 2013 Mexican drama film written and directed by Carlos Reygadas. It was screened out of competition at the 2013 Cannes Film Festival. It was awarded the Golden Leopard at the 2013 Locarno International Film Festival. The film was selected as the Mexican entry for the Best Foreign Language Film at the 86th Academy Awards but it was not nominated. Plot After killing a stray dog, kidnapper Ulises Valenzuela takes care of the dog he finds, and goes to a local record store to get his latest songs. After that he begins to check how well his stolen shotgun works and finds that it is working perfectly; he releases the dog in a nearby field. Two weeks later, Ulises and his friend Ángel are headed to Monterrey to meet a potential buyer for his stolen car. He is taking his friend to help because he is a talentless local drunk with no connections. On the way, they encounter Rosaura, who is hitchhiking. On the way to the meeting, they pick up a two young girls, Rosario and Irma, who were given a ride in Rosaura's car. They were dropped off in a rural area and eventually walked to a nearby bar. Ulises drinks heavily in the bar, neglecting the girls he is supposed to be guarding. They leave and drink at a cafe, where Irma loses her shoes and Rosario is angry. Ulises finally arrives to the meeting with the boys, but he sees that the buyer doesn't show up. He tells his friend he doesn't want the deal and begins to walk with the girls. Ulises intends to rape Rosario but the girls convince him to take them to Monterrey. Along the way, they get a flat tire and proceed to a house to get an air pump. In Monterrey, the girls are dropped off near a bar. Ulises arrives and is given a job washing dishes at the bar. Two of the locals work there, and Ulises' uncle owns the bar. While washing dishes he runs into Rosaura, who is dancing with one of the locals. They fall in love and go to the nearby river to take a bath. There, they talk about the unsuccessful meeting with the buyer and kiss. Ulises is angry to learn that Rosaura has a boyfriend and the two argue. On the way back to the bar, they see Rosaura with a new boyfriend
