The courses.Search I have recently become interested in the lifestyle of the Native tribes in North America. This interest has come about due to a personal "face-to-face" experience with a great deal of the lifestyle, whilst working at an archaeological site in North America. I thought I'd take a few minutes and discuss this experience as well as my thoughts on the subject. In order to understand the lifestyle of the Native tribes, one must first understand the course of history that America has been through. When the Europeans first landed, they were open to the fact that there were healthy, stable tribes of people in North America. The tribe members met the prospect with wisened understanding and reservation. One important fact in order to understand the point I am making here is that the tribes were completely self-sufficient. They managed all aspects of their lives in their own way. This was for the good of their communities and their families. In a sense, the tribe was a coherently functioning system. When the Europeans showed up, they began a tradition of settling in the same area over time and over generations. When a new group arrived, it was not unlike moving into a new suburb or town. Once families settled into their new environment, their children began to assimilate into the new "culture" and adopted some of the ways of their surrounding culture. In the case of the Europeans, the Europeans began to adopt many of the ways that their new environment had to offer. In the near future, I will go into a discussion on the current situation of the Native tribes in the Americas. By: Richard B.
